Jamie Godfrey's Story

I recently met a young man named “John” who came to Bobby’s Hospice with terminal cancer. He was very ill and in pain. It was hard for his family to see him suffer in such a way. He was referred to our house so that he and his family could get support on his end of life journey and to give him the best quality of life possible for the rest of his life.

Thanks to the staff (who I am proud to call my co-workers) and volunteers “John” was able to get the pain management and care he so desperately needed.

One day I saw “John” sitting in the corner of the couch at Bobby’s Hospice, his wife sitting next to him and his mom and dad and his new Hospice friends surrounding him. I saw John smiling, holding his wife’s hand, telling a story and making everyone around him smile and laugh.

This is why I do my job. As Development Manager, I work hard to raise money so people like “John” and others can spend precious time together and make memories that will last forever.
